Sept. 25 – Healthy Living: Protecting the Brains of Individuals with I/DD

Individuals with intellectual and developmental disabilities are living longer than ever. As a result, it's important for clinicians to have the knowledge base to help them take care of their brains for a long, healthy life while aging. In this training, attendees will learn the factors that may increase a person living with I/DD's risk of dementia and the ways that their brain health can be supported through healthy habits.

Oct. 23 – Behavior and ADL Changes in Individuals with I/DD and Dementia

Behavior and ADL changes are common symptoms of dementia and may require different interventions than responding to behaviors caused by an I/DD. This training is designed to help attendees learn more about dementia-related behavior and activities of daily living (ADL) changes in those with I/DD. Topics include common changes; strategies to help decipher the root cause of the change; and how to best respond to and support individuals.

Nov. 6 – Home Safety and Environmental Modifications for Individuals with I/DD and Dementia

Working with individuals who have I/DD and dementia can pose quite the challenge. However, there are modifications that can be made to the home environment to help ensure safety and independence. In this presentation, we will discuss how to assess the environment and the person for safety, learn about safety issues for different stages of dementia, and learn about dementia-friendly environments and modifications that can be made.

Nov. 20 – Activity Planning for Individuals with I/DD and Dementia

Engaging individuals with I/DD and dementia in activities is important. Involvement in structured and routine activities can decrease agitation, increase mood, and provide meaningful opportunities for engagement in life. This session will teach participants how to design and implement activities for people with I/DD during each stage of dementia.

Dec. 4 – Dementia Screening and Diagnosis for Individuals with I/DD

Dementia in those with intellectual developmental disability may not look like what you expect. In this training, attendees will learn the common changes that may indicate dementia in those with I/DD, when and how to use two screening tools to record changes that may indicate possible dementia. This training will also help you determine when to refer to a diagnosing physician for further investigation and the components of a comprehensive dementia diagnosis.
